

Chaining multiple models in sequence. This is common in applications like image processing, where each image is passed through a series of transformations.

Ensembling multiple models. Often, business logic is used to select the best output or filter the outputs for a given request.

Dynamically selecting and dispatching to models. Many use cases don't require every available model for every input request. This pattern allows only querying the necessary models.

